

I was very impressed with "Ipek Tohumcu's" convertible leather jackets. The outfit in this photo looks like something Amelia Earhart would've worn as she embarked in one of her epic adventures. There were many different references in world history, art and culture when it came to the shapes of the jackets: among them, Tudor style sleeves, Mayan/Aztec-style embroidery on jackets and Piet Mondrian - like patterns on evening dresses among a few. There were a multitude of styles, I have to agree, however, the surprises these compartments showed, the shapes of these coats plus their versatility wowed me the most. The jackets are investment pieces for those looking for one of a kind pieces. (Photo by Fashionable Pinay in Vancouver)
